Black Tea

A soft, seductive aroma from the valleys of Darjeeling

Darjeeling: the very word is beguiling, just like the flavour of the fragrant tea that bears that name.

The story began in the mid-19th century, when the famous British botanist Robert Fortune travelled from China to the Eastern Himalayas, making his way to the Bengali town of Darjeeling, known as the “place of the thunderbolt”.

He brought with him the seeds of Chinese tea plants, with the aim of growing them in this area and establishing a new commercial venture for Britain’s East India Company.

The cool, fresh climate of these hills, standing at a height of 1000 to 2000 metres, proved to be ideal for cultivation, giving the tea its delicate fruity flavour, and leading it to be called “the champagne of tea”.

The typical dark colour of this much-loved variety is due to the process of oxidation, to which the leaves are subjected after harvesting, maceration and drying.

The leaves are harvested twice a year: in early spring, to produce a tea with a stronger, more complex taste, while the second harvest takes place after longer exposure to the sun, resulting in a tea with a softer, more fruity flavour.

The leaves of this black tea make the long journey from the Darjeeling hills to our Laboratories, the heart and the mind behind every scented product in the L'Erbolario Collection.

These special leaves have provided three wonderful ingredients for our cosmetics: an extract with a toning, revitalising effect, a refreshing, fragrant infusion, and an oily extract that promotes suppleness.

To make our recipes even more special, we have also drawn on other plants with important cosmetic properties.

So, an extract from Vanilla has a toning and softening effect, and Cardamom has provided us with an extract which acts as an antioxidant and helps prevent moisture loss.

This perfect blend of ingredients promotes a feeling of well-being in your skin, rather like the sensation you get from a refreshing cup of black tea.
